

B	I	N	G	O
The primary field of study a student chooses to focus on during their college education.	A secondary field of study that complements the major but requires fewer credits.	A lengthy research paper required for a master's degree or higher.	A record of a student's academic performance including grades and courses taken.	On-campus housing for students.
An administrator responsible for overseeing a specific academic department or college.	A faculty member who provides guidance on course selection and academic planning.	The physical area and buildings of a college or university.	Financial aid granted to students based on merit or need.	A comprehensive research document required for a doctoral degree.
On-campus housing for students.	The formal completion of a degree program.	Units representing the amount of coursework a student completes.	A course that is chosen by the student based on their interests or program requirements.	Financial aid awarded to students based on academic athletic or other achievements.
A student who is pursuing an advanced degree (master's or doctoral).	A student who lives off-campus and travels to school for classes.	The completion of all requirements for a degree.	An academic title awarded upon successful completion of a program of study.	Non-academic activities such as clubs sports or volunteer work.
The fee paid for instruction and academic services at a college or university.	The fee charged for academic instruction.	Non-academic activities that provide opportunities for socialization and skill-building.	A small-group class focused on discussion research and collaboration.	A senior administrator responsible for overseeing a specific academic area or college.

B	I	N	G	O
An instructional presentation given by a professor to a group of students.	A student who lives off-campus and travels to school for classes.	A required course that must be taken before enrolling in another course.	A document outlining the course objectives schedule assignments and expectations for a class.	A facility equipped for scientific research experiments or hands-on learning.
Financial aid awarded to students based on academic athletic or other achievements.	An administrator responsible for overseeing a specific academic department or college.	An administrative official responsible for student records and enrollment.	A course that a student can choose to take based on personal interest or to fulfill requirements.	The formal completion of a degree program.
A document outlining the objectives content assignments and schedule of a course.	On-campus housing for students.	A student who is pursuing an advanced degree (master's or doctoral).	A course that is chosen by the student based on their interests or program requirements.	A student who is working on an advanced degree.
The physical area and buildings of a college or university.	A comprehensive research document required for a doctoral degree.	Units representing the amount of work in a course often used for graduation requirements.	The office responsible for student records and enrollment.	A student pursuing a bachelor's degree.
An extensive research project typically required for a doctoral degree.	An official document listing a student's academic history including courses taken and grades earned.	A form used to determine eligibility for federal financial aid in the U.S.	A record of a student's academic performance including grades and courses taken.	Monetary assistance to help students pay for their education.

B	I	N	G	O
Units representing the amount of work in a course often used for graduation requirements.	Systematic investigation and study to discover new knowledge or insights.	On-campus housing for students.	Funding provided to students to help cover the costs of education.	The completion of all requirements for a degree.
A course that is chosen by the student based on their interests or program requirements.	A faculty member who guides students in their course selections and academic progress.	Monetary assistance to help students pay for their education.	An extensive research project typically required for a doctoral degree.	A form used to determine eligibility for federal financial aid in the U.S.
Non-academic activities such as clubs sports or volunteer work.	An instructional presentation given by a professor to a group of students.	An official document listing a student's academic history including courses taken and grades earned.	A student pursuing a bachelor's degree.	A student pursuing a bachelor's degree.
A lengthy research paper required for a master's degree or higher.	An administrative official responsible for student records and enrollment.	A faculty member who provides guidance on course selection and academic planning.	The primary field of study a student chooses to focus on during their college education.	A document outlining the objectives content assignments and schedule of a course.
Work experience related to a student's field of study often for academic credit.	Work experience often related to a student's major that provides practical learning opportunities.	Using someone else's work or ideas without proper citation or permission.	A course that a student can choose to take based on personal interest or to fulfill requirements.	On-campus housing for students.